Rome can be pricey for travelers, which is why many choose to stay in a hostel (旅社). The hostels in Rome offer a bed in a dorm room for around $25 a night, and for that, you'll often get to stay in a central location with security and comfort.

Yellow Hostel

If I had to make just one recommendation for where to stay in Rome, it would be Yellow Hostel. It's one of the best-rated hostels in the city, and for good reason. It's affordable, and it's got a fun atmosphere without being too noisy. As an added bonus, it's close to the main train station.

Hostel Alessandro Palace

If you love social hostels, this is the best hostel for you in Rome. Hostel Alessandro Palace is fun. Staff members hold plenty of bar events for guests like free shots, bar crawls and karaoke. There's also an area on the rooftop for hanging out with other travelers during the summer.

Youth Station Hostel

If you're looking for cleanliness and a modern hostel, look no further than Youth Station. It offers beautiful furnishings and beds. There are plenty of other benefits, too; it doesn't charge city tax; it has both air conditioning and a heater for the rooms; it also has free Wi-Fi in every room.

Hotel and Hostel Des Artistes

Hotel and Hostel Des Artistes is located just a 10-minute walk from the central city station and it's close to all of the city's main attractions. The staff is friendly and helpful, providing you with a map of the city when you arrive, and offering advice if you require some. However, you need to pay 2 euros a day for Wi-Fi.

Sandoval, who comes from Los Angeles, has traveled and filmed in over 50 countries across seven continents and now lives in China. "In 2008, tired of my studio work in the U.S, I came to China, with the hope of trying something different for myself." he said.

Sandoval is a professional photographer and he went to Chengdu in Southwest China to live in October 2008 and has traveled throughout the country since then.

To him, Chengdu is the capital of a laid-back lifestyle. He was delighted to see that residents, dressed stylishly or comfortably, strolled in the streets "as slowly as snails". Almost a "walking encyclopedia" of Chengdu, Sandoval covered every corner of Chengdu and recorded Chengduese and their lives with his camera, listening to the sound of mahjong being played and music from traditional stringed instruments.

He also goes from place to place with his heavy travel kit. The various culture and vast, beautiful land has kept him in China much longer than he had planned in the beginning. He remembers a wide range of adventures like exploring a local vineyard and local wine in Yinchuan City, a riding performance by a Mongolian ethnic group in the Shuidonggou Horse Riding Show, and then the totally different experience of visiting the Hainan Free Trade Port in the south.

He thinks he has done a lot in "this beautiful and vast country" with his "travel photos". "I try to show people the beauty of where I go. I try to inspire them to travel and go to places. I'm hoping to do more international work," he said.

4. Why did Sandoval come to China in 2008?

   D. He was attracted by China's natural scenery.
5. What does the underlined word "laid-back" in Paragraph 3 refer to?
   A. Fast-paced.　B. Healthy.　C. Leisurely.　D. Simple.
6. What do Sandoval's experiences around China show in Paragraph 4?
   A. His fascination for Chinese culture.　B. His superb photo technique.
   C. His desire for new careers.　D. His diverse hobbies.
7. What is the writing purpose of this passage?
   A. To praise Sandoval for his studio work in the U. S.
   B. To facilitate the development of tourism in Chengdu.
   C. To call on readers to take up photography as a hobby.
   D. To introduce the experience of a foreign photographer in China.

C

The "hedgehog (刺猬) dilemma" is a famous metaphor from German philosopher Arthur Schopenhauer. In his 1851 book, he described how humans struggle with relationships through a story about hedgehogs. His advice was simple: keep your distance.

This sad story became widely discussed. Sigmund Freud and modern scientists studied this idea. In 2015, an award-winning short film called Hedgehog retold this story.

How does this apply to real life? Most people remember being hurt by close relationships – broken friendships, family conflicts, or romantic betrayals. Since these connections matter deeply, their damage hurts more. Should we stop trusting others? Schopenhauer said yes, but science would say otherwise.

A study in PLOS Medicine reviewing 148 studies with over 300,000 people found those with strong social connections live 50% longer. The National Institute on Aging warns that loneliness harms health as much as smoking 15 cigarettes daily – making Schopenhauer's advice worrying.

When hurt repeatedly, people often fall into defense mode. Relationship expert Hilary Sanders explains common defense behaviors: going silent during arguments, seeing normal comments as criticism, or overreacting to small issues. These reactions often start in childhood. If parents often criticized or classmates bullied someone, they might develop habits like pretending not to care or getting angry easily. While these helped survive childhood pain, they cause problems in adult relationships when used unconsciously.

The good news is people can change. Through therapy, many learn to recognize their defense patterns and understand their origins. Couples can improve relationships by learning each other's emotional triggers and responding thoughtfully instead of arguing. However, Sanders warns that defenses shouldn't be removed suddenly — it's like taking down a wall brick by brick.

Although Schopenhauer focused on the pain of closeness, the hedgehog story actually shows our deep need for connection. Unlike real hedgehogs, humans aren't born with physical spines. By carefully lowering our defenses around trustworthy people, we might truly enjoy both warmth and safety in relationships.

8. Why does the author mention the hedgehog dilemma in paragraph 1?
   A. To stress its importance. B. To support Schopenhauer's advice.
   C. To recommend Schopenhauer's book. D. To introduce the theme of relationship.
9. What is Schopenhauer's key solution to the "hedgehog dilemma"?
   A. Ignore pain. B. Seek therapy. C. Avoid closeness. D. Build bridges.
10. What major evidence goes against Schopenhauer's advice?
   A. Freud's studies. B. Longevity from social ties.
   C. Henry's short film. D. Defense behavior of people.
11. What does Sanders say about close connection?
   A. People should make gradual progress in it.
   B. Humans can benefit from it unconsciously.
   C. It can help children relieve childhood pain.
   D. Couples should learn to defend it thoughtfully.

As data and identity theft becomes more and more common, the market is growing for biometric(生物测量)technologies—like fingerprint scans—to keep others out of private e-spaces. At present, these technologies are still expensive, though.

Researchers from Georgia Tech say that they have come up with a low-cost device that gets around this problem: a smart keyboard. This smart keyboard precisely measures the cadence(节奏)with which one types and the pressure fingers apply to each key. The keyboard could offer a strong layer of security by analyzing things like the force of a user's typing and the time between key presses. These patterns are unique to each person. Thus, the keyboard can determine people's identities, and by extension, whether they should be given access to the computer it's connected to—regardless of whether someone gets the password right.

It also doesn't require a new type of technology that people aren't already familiar with. Everybody uses a keyboard and everybody types differently.

In a study describing the technology, the researchers had 100 volunteers type the word "touch" four times using the smart keyboard. Data collected from the device could be used to recognize different participants based on how they typed, with very low error rates. The researchers say that the keyboard should be pretty straightforward to commercialize（商业化）and is mostly made of inexpensive, plastic-like parts. The team hopes to make it to market in the near future.

12. Why do the researchers develop the smart keyboard?
   A. To reduce pressure on keys. B. To improve accuracy in typing.
   C. To replace the password system. D. To cut the cost of e-space protection.
13. What makes the invention of the smart keyboard possible?
   A. Computers are much easier to operate.
   B. Fingerprint scanning techniques develop fast.
   C. Typing patterns vary from person to person.
   D. Data security measures are guaranteed.
14. What do the researchers expect of the smart keyboard?
   A. It'll be environment-friendly. B. It'll reach consumers soon.
   C. It'll be made of plastics. D. It'll help speed up typing.
15. Where is this text most likely from?
   A. A diary. B. A guidebook C. A novel. D. A magazine.
